YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

'THIS MAN SOUNDS FLAKEY AS PIE CRUST . . .'

Dear Ann Landers: I'm 26 and for the past year I've been dating a man 31 who works for the same company Rex told me he was divorced before being transferred here. He spoke seriously of marriage.

I observed, however, that many weekends he was "occupied" and couldn't even telephone. When, after a company meeting, Rex avoided speaking to me in the presence of the executives, I became more suspicious than hurt.

I asked a close friend in personnel to check the records. When she told me the records showed Rex is still married the pieces fit together.

I confronted him with the fact at once and he became furious. He shouted, "Your investigation was an invasion of privacy. I never bothered to change the record. I considered marrying you but you've ruined the relationship for all time. Goodbye."

I believe him, Ann, and I'm broken-hearted. Was I justified in checking the records? Please tell me.—MARIANNE

Dear Marianne: Dry your tears, Buttercup. This man sounds as flakey as mother's apple-pie crust. The lost weekends plus the drop-dead treatment in front of the executives adds up to a married man — not a divorced one.

If you had asked your friend to check on Rex's salary, I'd agree it was an invasion of privacy, but a man's marital status should be a matter of public record and not "private information" — unless, of course, he's trying to keep it private for obvious reasons.

Dear Ann Landers: About a year ago I had to admit my husband had lost all interest in me. I looked in the mirror and decided it was all my fault. I had put on a lot of weight and looked terrible. So I launched an intensive campaign to "re-interest" him. I dieted strenuously, lost almost 40 pounds, and had my hair restyled. I bought smart, new clothes and even got my teeth fixed. When old friends met me on the street they couldn't get over the change. My husband — well, he has yet to say a word.

I have a lovely home, nice children and a lot to be thankful for. My husband says he loves me but claims he's not the demonstrative type. I think I could fight another woman easier than I can fight his indifference. I'm 27 and he is 28, so he's not over the hill if that's what you're thinking. Help me, please.—INVISIBLE

Dear Invisible: I hate to resort to a cliché, but actions do speak louder than words. The measure of a man's devotion is not what he says but how he behaves.

Of course it's disappointing to work hard to please a guy and then have him just sit there like a clam with a broken hinge, but if that's his nature you can't change him.

Dear Ann Landers: I know this letter will never make the column but I had to write it anyway. This is for the benefit of kids who think their lives are ruined because a sister or brother got into trouble and spoiled the family name.

My older sister had a baby out of wedlock. The stories kept the town gossips plenty busy. My parents were heartbroken. I decided it would be MY job to bring honor and respectability to our home.

I held my head up even though some of my friends told me they couldn't associate with me anymore. Parents' orders. I worked twice as hard in school as I ever had before and I became active in student government. My grades were tops and I was elected to office. I know now that my sister's mistake made a better person out of me. — TERRY LEE
